Specific categories of light pollution include light trespass, over-illumination, glare, light clutter, and skyglow. A single offending light source often falls into more than one of these categories. Light trespass. Light trespass occurs when unwanted light enters one's property, for instance, by shining over a neighbor's fence.

In the study of geometrical optics, we find it acceptable to represent the interaction of light waves with plane and spherical surfaces with mirrors and lenses in terms of light rays. With the useful geometric construct of a light ray we can illustrate propagation, reflection, and refraction of light in clear, uncomplicated drawings.

A mirror is the most common example of specular light reflection. It usually consists of a glass sheet in front of a metallic coating where the reflection actually occurs. Reflection also occurs from the surface of transparent media, such as water or glass.

In optics, the refractive index or index of refraction of a material is a dimensionless number that describes how fast light propagates through the material. It is defined as  $n = \frac{c}{v}$ , where  $c$  is the speed of light in vacuum and  $v$  is the phase velocity of light in the medium. For example, the refractive index of water is 1.333, meaning that light travels 1.333 times as fast in vacuum as in water.
